India is chiefly an agricultural land. The cultivation of crops depends on a proper supply of water throughout the year. People had known that if surplus flood water could be stored for use during the dry season, these problems will be solved.

Unfortunately they had neither the knowledge nor the means to do much in this direction. Whatever little they knew, they tried to put to practice. They dug canals to draw water from perennial rivers. This was heavy and expensive work and practicable over only a small area. Large tanks were excavated and small dams built to hold back floods. But it was not possible to do anything on a countrywide scale.

A man who is intolerant, is not a human being in the full sense of the expression. To become enraged at antagonism is surely a sign of weakness. Of course, there are many who do not want to recognize the principle of tolerance as being eternal. The feelings of anger which accompany negative reaction must somehow be vented, and those who think and act in this way are keen to retain the illusion that, in hitting back, they are not doing anything unlawful.

Such thinking is quite wrong. In reality when a man is enraged at anything which goes against his will, tolerance as a priority becomes paramount. Many men try to become superman. But the true superman is one who is really trying situations and can demonstrate his super-tolerance.

In everyday matters, where there is none of the stress, and strain of opposition, no one has difficulty in being tolerant. It is only in extraordinary situations, fraught with conflict, that the truly tolerant man will prove his mettle.
